

The Burning Sky

They say the ocean is the ancient enemy of fire. Yet here, at the boundary of day and night, the horizon bleeds in a quiet, burning symphony.

"Kannan (whispering): "Even the water seems to catch fire...""

A Single Spark

But twilight eventually fades, leaving only the endless, freezing deep. In the heart of the void, a memory of warmth stirs.

"Kannan: "Just a spark. Stay.""

Feeding the Light

It blooms in the damp, heavy air?a fragile, stolen sun cradled by wet hands. Proof that we can burn, even when submerged in the deep.

"Kannan: "You are so small, yet you chase away the whole night.""

Echoes in the Deep

From the quiet abyss below, a silent chorus answers. Two lights?one born of sky, one of water?whispering across the glassy divide.

"Kannan (thought): 'We are never truly alone in the dark. We just have to shine first.'"

Ascension

To cradle the fire is a gift, but to release it is grace. Go now. Find your place among the quiet stars.

"Kannan: "Fly home...""